«The more things devolve, the more music starts to take on a role or impression of refuge, escape, solace, retreat, which is perhaps anything but irrational... Both as a player and as a listener. We didn't know, though of course we should have expected, that we would have so much to be blue about. Fortunately, that truly unique invention of lament with a vital urge to transform into light, well, it still and always works somehow, even when the world seems to be bent on self-destruction. Refuge, shelter, retreat... It might also be the air purifiers in the recording studio, the extra oxygen, the spotless surfaces, the reassuring lack of windows. The similarity to a proverbial padded room. Does all that get into the music, like a good contagion? Maybe... just maybe». by ©Steve Piccolo
